

Title: Does music enable us to understand foreign lyrics.

Author: Yahya Awad Sharif Mohammed

Abstract: This article aims to clarify briefly that music might be the reason behind our ability to understand a song foreign lyrics.

Article:

Some people enjoy listening to foreign music that they do not understand its lyrics, because they in fact somehow by their deep minds understand it exactly as they understand it by their upper mind, i.e. normal understanding, fully understanding and then enjoy it, the mind by its deep strength can understand the meaning by sensing what is the person or singer really speaking about or what does he mean, I notice some parts of the foreign songs I hear are the most enjoyable and it appears to be that kinds of very meaningful words when they are translated, these parts might be words, phrases or a full sentence, hence my idea is not that simple explanation of (understanding by one's heart)

Most people are embarrassed to listen to foreign songs they don't understand, the rest prefer to listen to songs of their own culture, hence my idea is not that simple explanation of ((understanding by one's heart but other people do not have this capability)

A person might enjoy the song even if without focusing on the meaning, and in the case of foreign songs, the same applies, i.e. focusing in words we hear their existence without understanding them is more enjoyable than in the case of not concentrating on the same unknown-in-meaning exists-in-pronunciation words.

Listening to foreign songs might be more enjoyable for:

- 1) words are deeply understood.
- 2) words and music are both understood deeply the same way.

I think the reason behind this deep understanding is music, whether plain music or sung words. Music can be understood deeply , when combined with words the song is understood as a whole.
